Message

from the Chester County
Agricultural Development Council

The Chester County Board of Commissioners and the Agricultural Development Council (Ag Council) are pleased to share the following stories about the people and places that make agriculture our county’s top industry.

During this past year, the Ag Council—along with our Chester County Ag Task Force Partners including Penn State Extension, the Chester County Economic Development Council, Western Chester County Chamber of Commerce and local farmers—undertook the county’s first ag economic development strategic plan to better understand the threats and opportunities facing agriculture today, and to identify ways we can all work together to support our ag business entrepreneurs and the critical work they do.

Although the plan’s strategies are largely a road map for ag industry partners and farm businesses, Chester County residents benefit from a stronger, more resilient agriculture industry in many ways. When farm businesses thrive, there is less competition for other kinds of more intensive land development. Successful farms also bring increased employment opportunities, a vibrant local food community, venues for family fun, environmental benefits—and the overall sense of place enjoyed by so many in the county.

Journey along with us on these pages and get to know your farming neighbors and all the delicious, locally grown products they produce. When you buy from these farm businesses, you are doing your part to ensure that these farms are here in our communities now and in the future, growing our economy and supplying us with some of the freshest, most flavorful foods available. Thank you for choosing Chester County grown!

Micro Dairy, Big Opportunity: Pigeon Creek Farm Pottstown, PA

The pandemic brought hardship to many, but former Penn State Extension 4-H Program Assistant Abby Bramm and her family have turned adversity into an opportunity through opening Pigeon Creek Farm, a micro dairy, on their 32-acre preserved property in Pottstown.

“We’d all been moving so fast with work and school, and then the pandemic caused everything to come to a screeching halt,” recalls Bramm. “My work hours were reduced, and I needed to decide whether to get a second job or fulfill my farm dream. That’s when I discovered the micro dairy concept.”

Micro dairies are farms with fewer than 30 milking cows. For perspective, most Chester County dairy farms have at least 70 cows with a few operations having several thousand. Nationally, the number of dairies is decreasing, yet those that remain are growing larger for improved economy of scale.

Despite the national trend for larger farms, Bramm realized there was wisdom in being smaller than the competition. She milks an average of four cows, producing 25–30 gallons of milk a day, with help from her father-in-law, mother, brother, husband, and daughters, who pitch in when they are able.

FARM BEGINNINGS

“I blame my wonderful neighbors for all of this,” laughs Bramm, gesturing at the farm. “We started milking one cow for our family’s needs, and then several neighbors started asking if they could purchase our surplus milk. We decided to take the leap and open a full dairy the summer of 2020 and opened the doors to our own little store December 8, 2020.”

Despite the community’s enthusiasm, Bramm knew she needed to scale up gradually, as she was and still is a largely one-woman business.

“As a dairy farmer, all your supplies are astronomically expensive,” says Bramm. “I wanted to make the most of what we already had since it’s a slow return, especially at first.”

Following that principle, she decided to begin by producing raw milk instead of pasteurized. Milk from the grocery store is usually pasteurized, a process involving heat to kill bacteria, whereas raw milk has had nothing done to it other than being filtered and cooled to 38 degrees.

“Producing raw milk doesn’t require as much start-up equipment as pasteurized milk, and better still, we knew our customers were looking for it,” says Bramm.

Once her customer base began to grow, Bramm felt comfortable expanding. Pigeon Creek Farm’s store now features raw milk, eggs, chicken, cheese and produce from the farm, as well as pastries, yogurt, and beef from other local producers. She largely credits the farm’s sales growth to evolving customer preferences.

“The pandemic helped a lot of people reconsider where their food was coming from as well as who it was coming from,” says Bramm. “It seems customers are coming back not just for the milk but for the connection.”

Bramm also credits her relationships with mentors at Kulp’s and Kolb’s dairies where she learned about cow care and retail store operation in her teens and twenties. Neighboring dairy farmer Holly Sollenberger has been a tremendous help, giving her the knowledge and confidence as a fellow woman farmer to take the plunge into full-time farming.

“Relationships are what made this business possible,” she says. “Learning from older generations brings wisdom that you can’t get in a book.”

THE FUTURE

Bramm is excited about what the future will bring but understands her limits.

“I can’t do every job here on the farm, but I can build relationships with people who can,” she says. “We outsource our cheese production and bring in vendors who sell things we don’t raise here on the farm.”

Instead of working harder, she aims to work smarter. Rather than increasing store hours, she will be focusing on selling Pigeon Creek Farm products at other small markets to reach more customers. She also intends to expand into a line of pasteurized and flavored milks.

“As a 4-H leader, I saw lots of farms start and lots of farms have to close,” says Bramm. “It’s been hugely impactful for me to have the time to think about our business plan and what we can do differently.”

Styer's Peonies: Evolution of a Flower Farm

Chadds Ford, PA

Styer's Peonies founder and namesake J. Franklin Styer did not start out as a flower farmer. Styer was a talented botanist who pursued a wide variety of interests including landscaping, mushrooms, apples and peonies. He pioneered the use of air-conditioning in mushroom houses and extensively researched apple production in New York.

In 1920, Styer founded Styer's Peonies where he worked with his father on peony hybridization at their Concordville, Pa. farm and surrounding properties. Even at the height of the Depression, customers were eager to buy flowers. Peonies were, and continue to be, a popular flower for weddings and celebrations.

Over the 100 plus years Styer's Peonies has been in operation, J. Franklin Styer (and the business's subsequent owners) have grown peonies in North Carolina, Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania, New York and even Canada. Chester County has always been a favorite location, though.

NEW OWNERSHIP

"Old Man Styer said Chester County was the perfect place to grow peonies; our production is higher here than any other location," says current Styer's Peonies owner Richard Currie, citing the climate, rich soils and well-drained fields.

Styer's Peonies' current farm headquarters, first planted in 2004, is at Hill Girt Farm in Chadds Ford. The farm shares synergy with adjacent produce farm, SIW Vegetables (Currie is brothers-in-law with SIW Vegetables' farmer H.G. Haskell).

Currie originally became involved with Styer's Peonies in 1990. At the time he was an importer and wholesaler of fresh cut flowers sourced initially from his farm in Zimbabwe and (post-Apartheid) South Africa.

Over the next decade, Currie and Styer's then-owner, Sandra Evaniuck, combined resources overseeing different parts of the business. Evaniuck had worked for J. Franklin Styer before purchasing the business, and when she retired in 2004, Richard purchased it from her.

Currently, Styer's Peonies grows over 200 different peony cultivars on a combined acreage of approximately 100 acres. Each farm's different microclimate allows the business to extend peony availability for a total of six weeks.

Currie and his team select for flowering time, yield, color, fragrance, size and susceptibility to disease out of over one thousand peony varieties available on the market.

"I can't harvest all the peonies I grow; I keep wanting to plant more and more," he laughs.

Like with all businesses, the pandemic was particularly challenging.

"Events and celebrations came to a screeching halt," says Currie. Florists and the large flower markets, his largest customers, stopped ordering.

Despite the pandemic uncertainty, their direct-to-customer business has increased significantly in recent years. "Studies show that people are willing to spend extra on flowers in an economic downturn; it's an affordable luxury to cheer yourself up," he says.

STYER'S FESTIVAL OF THE PEONY, MAY 14-31

Direct to customer sales were increasing, but Currie was interested in finding other avenues to increase flower sales. A fellow grower in New Jersey gave Currie the idea to open the peony fields to the public.

Says Currie: "For years, my friend was pessimistic about his tulip business until he tried inviting the public onto his farm. It's been a huge success. He's been able to expand and thrive, and it's all smiles when I see him at grower conventions now."

"Styer's Festival of the Peony," a two-week event, opened to the public in 2019 after working with the township to obtain the necessary permitting. The following year, Currie and his team pivoted to provide a pandemic-friendly, drive-through-only festival, only two days before the festival was scheduled to open. He wasn't sure how the drive-through restrictions would be received.

He needn't have worried.

The three-mile driving route provided a way for visitors to see 25 acres of fragrant flowers in all shades of white, pink, yellow and red. Peony enthusiasts from as far away as Chicago flew in to experience the flowers at their peak. Currie doesn't know exactly how many visitors attended (they charge per vehicle), but he estimates thousands were able to visit.

"Everyone left with a smile on their faces, even during a difficult time," says Currie. "I was happy to see that Styer's made that possible."

Last year, visitors were able to experience the flowers in person as well as via car, drawing plenty of families and selfie-seekers. Heading towards their fourth year of the festival, May 14-31, Currie is looking forward to welcoming guests back to the fields.

Following the success of the Chadds Ford peony festival, Currie is considering hosting a similar event at his New York farm. He also enjoys working with his son who is now involved in the peony business and is excited to help shape Styer's future.

"With Longwood and Winterthur nearby, people are making this region a true horticultural destination and we are excited to be a part of that," says Currie. "Agritourism is an important component to the future of farming in Chester County."

Farmer of the Year:

Darryl King,

Manor Hill Farms

West Grove, PA

“When you’re a farmer, you work till the job gets done,” says Farmer of the Year Darryl King. In his case, that job could be everything from planting and harvesting row crops on his 220-acre farm in West Grove, to mentoring new and beginning farmers, or advocating for environmentally friendly farming practices and land preservation.

“I dream of leaving the land in better shape than how I got it during my turn to care for it,” says King. “My goal for my farm is to bridge the gap between farmer and consumer. I want people to understand how much effort I put into the farm and the crops.”

King and his wife Pam grow corn, soy, wheat and barley, primarily for animal feed, on their farm and on several other leased properties in the county. He also provides no-till drill rental and trucking services to other area farmers.

FARMLAND PRESERVATION

King comes from a long line of Chester County farmers with strong ties to the local farm community and the natural resources they steward.

“Darryl was nominated by the Chester County Ag Land Preservation Board for his dedication to farming and to the land,” says Geoff Shellington, Agricultural Programs Coordinator in the Parks and Preservation Department. “Darryl is always the first person to help someone in need, whether helping to rebuild a barn after a fire or providing guidance with the settings on a no-till drill.”

According to King, land preservation is extremely underrated when compared to other kinds of possible land uses.

“What costs a community more money long term: a farmer or a housing development?” he asks. “Farmland doesn’t burden the present infrastructure like development does. Think about wear and tear on the roads, increased police force, installing and maintaining new utilities and infrastructure.”

ENVIRONMENTAL STEWARDSHIP

King is also known as a farmer advocate for environmental best practices but acknowledges that he didn’t always farm with them foremost in mind.

He cites his friend Jay Hicks, a fellow Chester County crop farmer, who has been a positive influence on how his farming practices have changed over the years. He also credits his wife Pam, a Chester County Conservation District Agricultural Resource Conservationist (and daughter of a former Farmer of the Year award recipient), who has helped him develop their farm’s conservation plan as well as practices he uses on the properties they lease.

Not every farmer is lucky enough to be married to a conservationist though, and King understands that no one wants to be told how to do their jobs better. “I can talk to other farmers who are still tilling their fields about the benefits of switching to no-till and implementing cover crops because I’ve been through the process personally and am willing to help them avoid making the mistakes I’ve made,” he says.

BUILDING COMMUNITY

King not only builds soil health, but he also understands the importance of building the agricultural community in southern Chester County.

“When you meet Darryl, you can see that his inclination to work with and mentor other young farmers isn’t just a part of his business model, it’s his philosophy and way of life,” says Commissioner Marian Moskowitz. “It’s inspiring to hear young entrepreneurs like him who take the time to build up their communities and share the knowledge with their peers.”

“It’s important for me to be there when tragedy strikes or when a fellow young farmer gets started,” he says. “The world would be such a cold and lonely place if us farmers only viewed one another as competitors and threats to our own operations.”

Helping others in need is not just a result of King’s deep religious faith and personal beliefs; supporting his fellow farmer also makes business sense.

Says King: “If small dairies go out of business, then feed mills go, and then it becomes too expensive to truck your grain to far off mills so then the smaller row crop farms go. All of our businesses are related.”

Developing a strong farming network is a big part of his vision for the future of Chester County agriculture. He and an informal group of about fifteen other young farmers regularly text about weather conditions and what’s working and not working on their respective farms. They share equipment and pitch in on each other’s farms when needed.

“I don’t own a lot of equipment; sharing amongst friends is handy, but I value the relationships I build with other farmers,” says King. “In my grandfather’s time we all helped each other and if we aren’t careful, we might lose that way of life. If we lose that way of life, our farming community will suffer.”

Each year the Chester County Board of Commissioners and the Ag Council recognize a farmer, farm family, partnership, etc., who maintains and exemplifies outstanding farming practices. For more information about our Farmer of the Year awards program, visit www.chescofarming.org

The Healing Power of Horses: Thorncroft Equestrian Center Malvern, PA

Chester County is well known for its vibrant, diverse equine community. Olympic caliber equestrians call the region home and it regularly hosts world class events like Plantation Field International Horse Trials and the Devon Horse Show. Horsemanship is ingrained in the county's history and heritage and is an important element of the county's sense of place and economy.

But horseback riding is not just a sport to be enjoyed by elite athletes, it is a beloved pastime that can be enjoyed by riders of all skill levels, abilities, and ages, and can even provide holistic medical benefits to those who participate.

According to PATH (Professional Association of Therapeutic Horsemanship), riders with physical disabilities often show improvement in flexibility, balance, and muscle strength through working with horses. Therapeutic horsemanship can contribute to the cognitive, physical, emotional, and social well-being of individuals with disabilities.

THE THORNCROFT EXPERIENCE

Thorncroft Equestrian Center, a PATH Premier Accredited Center, serves approximately 300 riders per week out of its Malvern facility. They specialize in therapeutic horseback riding and other equine-assisted activities for children and adults with mental, emotional, and physical disabilities.

One of the things that makes Thorncroft special is that it is a mainstreaming facility where individuals of all abilities ride, learn, and relate to one another. About half of the center's students have special needs.

"We organize riders into groups based on their riding ability, regardless of whether or not they are riding for therapeutic reasons," says Mikaela Potrako, a development associate at Thorncroft.

Potrako, like many of her fellow staff members, started out riding and volunteering at the center for many years before eventually serving in a professional capacity. She says

Thorncroft is one of those special places that people never want to leave once they visit.

New riders are welcome throughout the year, regardless of experience.

“We have wonderful mentors and teachers that offer mounted and unmounted experiences,” says Potrako. “Our main goal is to keep everyone safe and set them up for success.”

Many students begin their Thorncroft experience in the unmounted lesson program while they wait for a spot to open in the mounted classes while others choose to stay in the program if it is a better fit for their needs and goals. Unmounted students learn the basics of ground horsemanship including grooming, lunging on a line and general horse care. Thorncroft instructors developed the unmounted program during the pandemic when it was difficult to maintain a 6-foot distance during mounted lessons, and the program’s popularity has taken off since then.

Mounted riders will typically start with a one-on-one private lesson with an instructor with aids available for help if needed. Once they master the basics of steering, walking, and trotting, they have the option to enter a semi-private or small group lesson.

Thorncroft is also known for its first responders and veterans program. These riders are given full scholarships to participate in a 6-week foundational course and weekly lessons.

Although Thorncroft is one of the largest therapeutic riding venues in the region, there are other facilities in Chester County that also specialize in different kinds of therapeutic experiences.

“We have a great network of therapeutic riding centers throughout the region,” says Potrako. “We are always happy to refer people to other places that might be a better fit for their abilities and needs. It’s all about our shared passion for horses.”

Get to know Chester County's Top Crop: Mushrooms

FUN FACTS

- The area around Kennett Square, PA has the largest concentration of mushroom farms in the country. Nearly two-thirds of all mushroom production occurs in Southeastern PA.
- Mushrooms double in size every 24 hours.
- Mushrooms are 90% water
- Mushrooms are grown in the dark, year-round, in buildings called mushroom houses.
- The most popular mushroom variety grown in the U.S. is white button, followed by crimini (brown or baby bellas), portabellas, enoki, oyster, maitake and shiitake.

STORAGE TIPS

- Store mushrooms in original packaging or in a porous paper bag for prolonged shelf life.
- To clean mushrooms, brush off any debris with fingers or a damp paper towel, or rinse briefly and pat dry with a paper towel.

NUTRITION FACTS

- One Portabella mushroom has more potassium than one medium banana.
- Mushrooms are low in calories and sodium, and fat, cholesterol and gluten-free.
- Mushrooms are the leading source of the antioxidant nutrient selenium in the produce aisle.
- Mushrooms are the only source of vitamin D in the produce aisle and one of the few non-fortified food sources. Vitamin D helps build and maintain strong bones by helping the body absorb calcium.

Classic Blended Burger

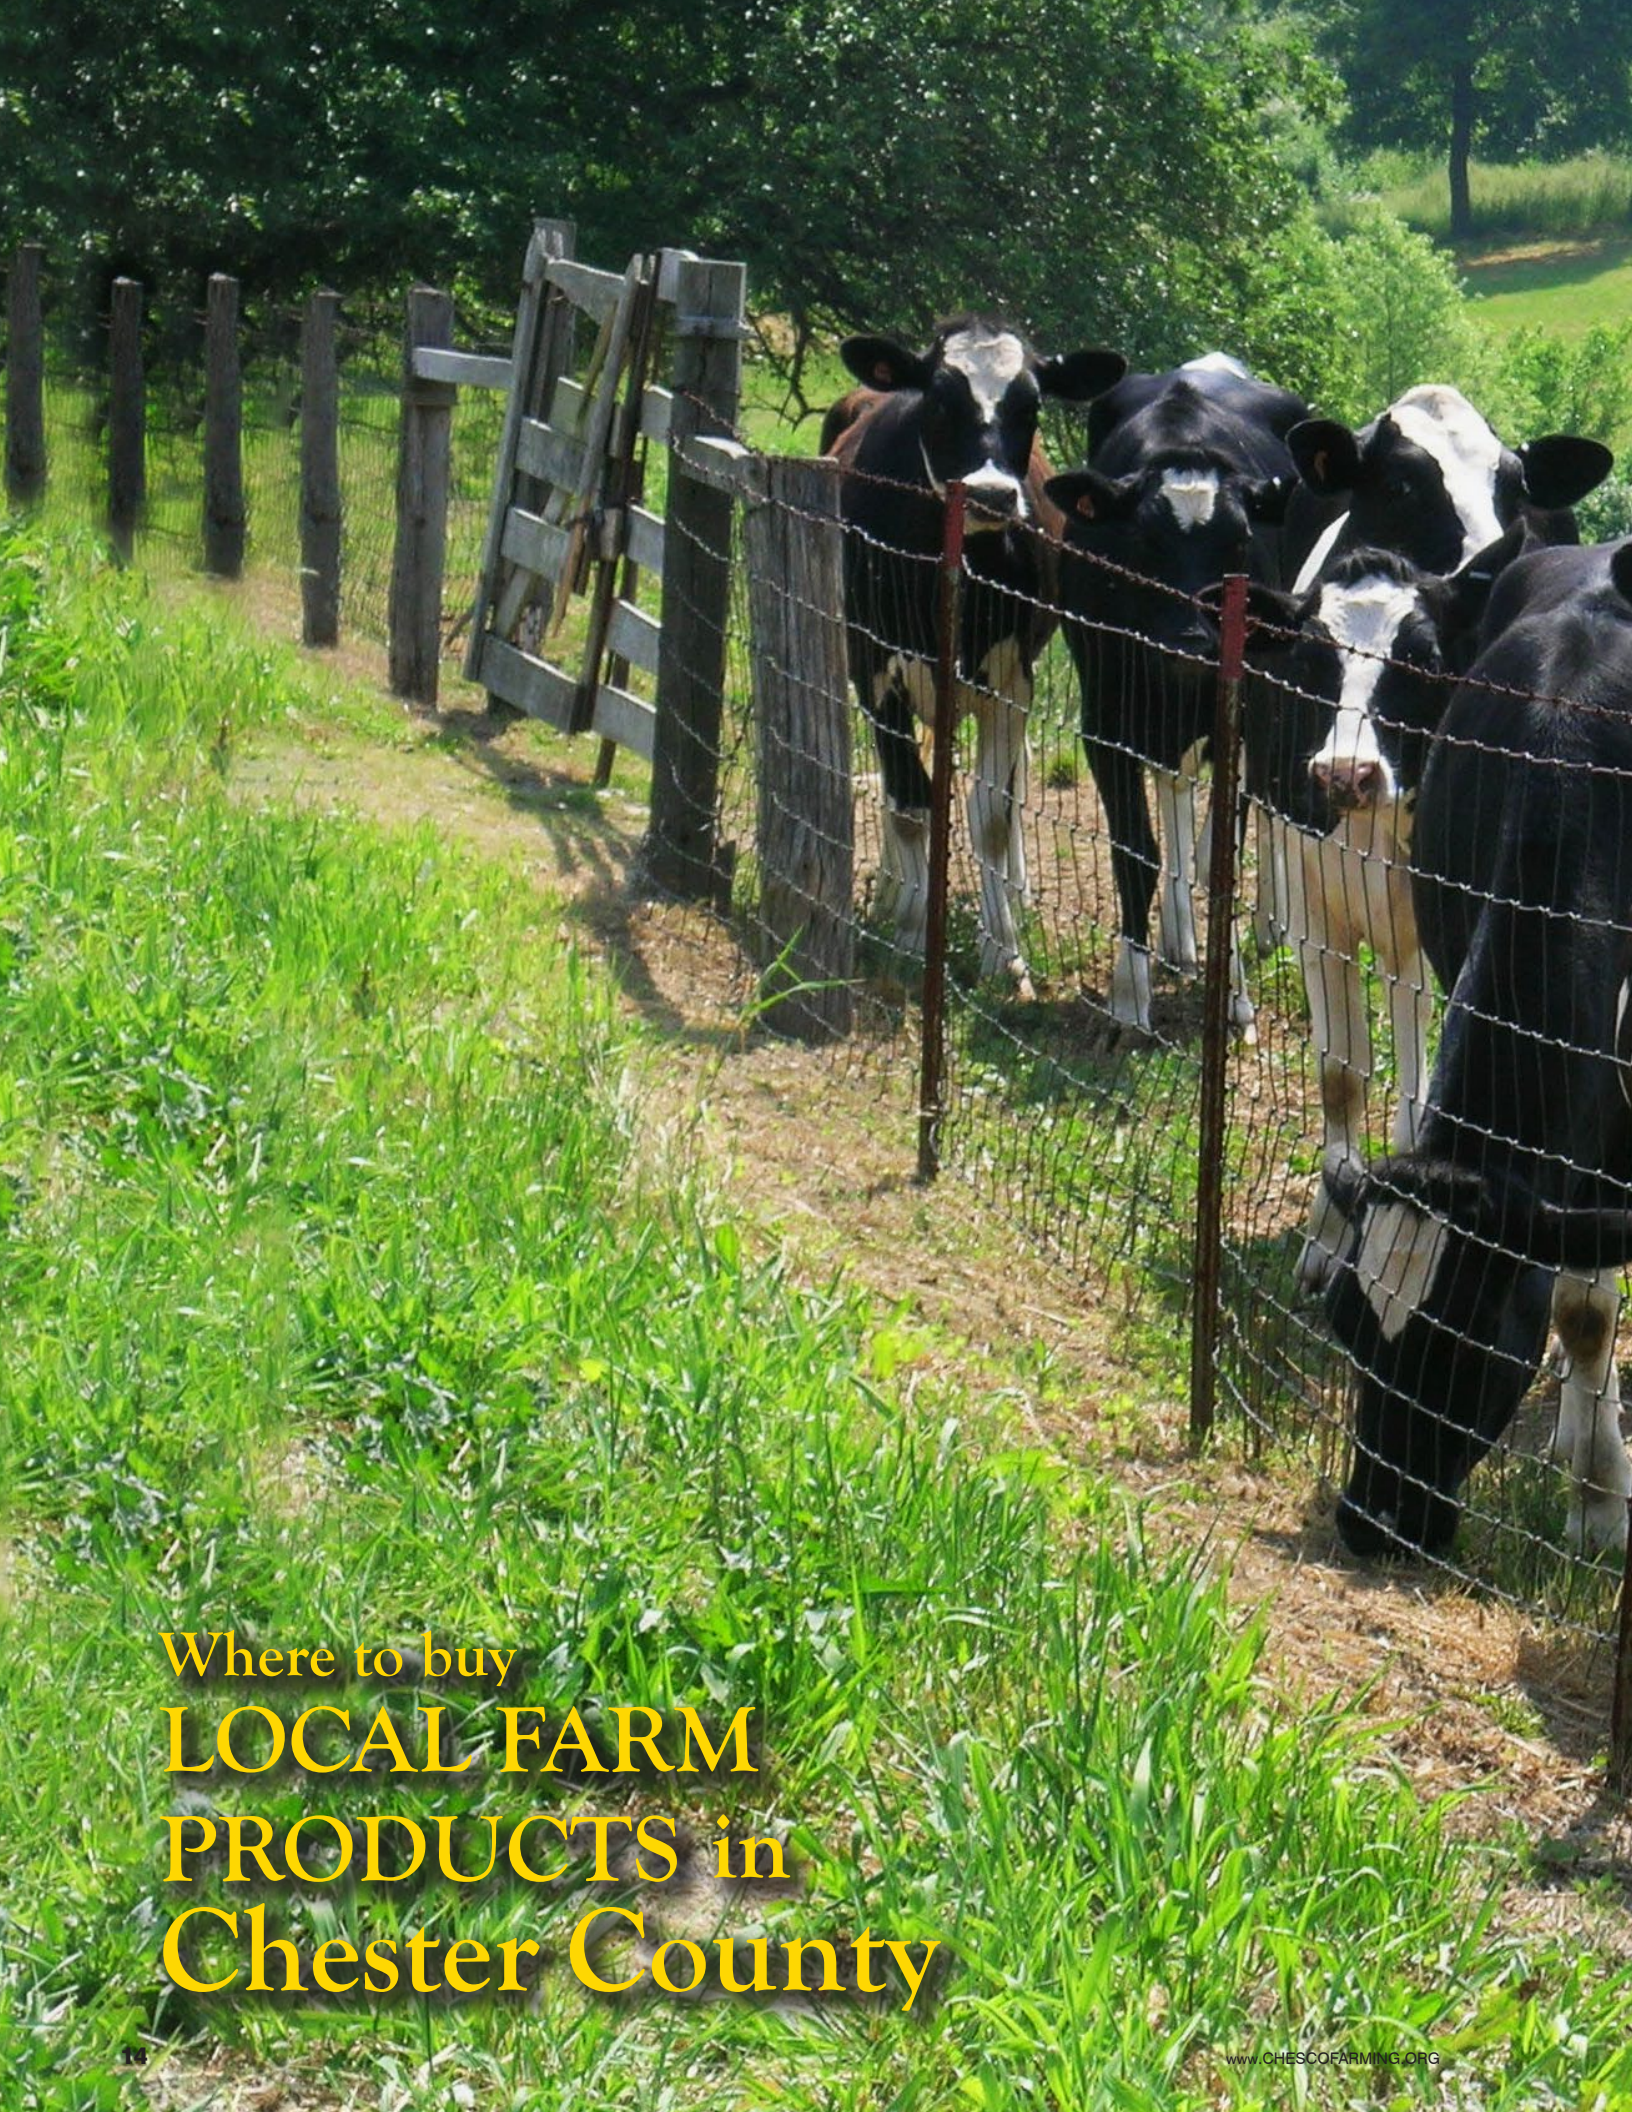

Mushrooms and beef are important—and delicious—Chester County farm products. This blended burger recipe from The Mushroom Council celebrates the best of both worlds. Mushrooms add extra moisture, nutrients and umami flavor without any added fat or cholesterol for a delicious burger experience.

INGREDIENTS

- 8 ounces of your favorite mushroom variety, finely chopped (suggested: crimini or white button)
- 1 pound ground beef
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 1 tablespoon olive oil
- 4-6 buns

INSTRUCTIONS

- Sauté the chopped mushrooms and let briefly cool.
- Add chopped mushrooms, ground meat and salt into a large bowl and mix until combined. Form into 4-5 large patties or 6 smaller patties.
- Heat olive oil in a large skillet over medium-high heat. Cook burger patties approximately 4 minutes per side, or to your preferred level of doneness. Remove burger patties from heat and toast buns in the same skillet.
- Assemble burgers with your favorite toppings and condiments.

Farmers Markets

Farmers markets are often open-air venues at which farmers and producers offer their products. For the purpose of this guide, farmers markets are generally “producer only markets,” meaning they sell what they produce, not items they purchase from other suppliers.

❄ Markets denoted with a snowflake host winter markets at least once a month during the off-season.

f Listings with the Facebook logo have a Facebook page at the time of publication.

SNAP: Markets with this designation accept Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP) benefits as payment for food purchases. Visit www.benefits.gov for more information.

CSA Community Supported Agriculture

Community Supported Agriculture (CSA) is a partnership between the farmer and the members of that CSA. Members pay upfront for the products they will receive during the growing season. This upfront investment helps the farmer have capital for seeds and supplies and helps the farmer plan how much produce to grow. The farmer and the members share in the bounty and/or risk of the harvest.

Chester County Commissioners Adopt First Ag Economic Development Strategic Plan

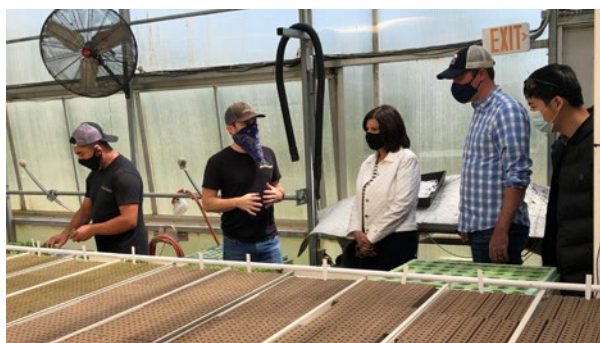

Chester County Commissioners Marian Moskowitz, Josh Maxwell and Michelle Kichline voted to adopt the county's first agriculture economic development strategic plan March 22nd, celebrating the county's commitment to farming for National Agriculture Day.

The ag plan is a result of a long-standing collaboration between organizations including the Chester County Ag Council (the administering agency), Chester County Economic Development Council, Western Chester County Chamber of Business, Penn State Extension, American Mushroom Institute, University of Pennsylvania's New Bolton Center and the Chester County Visitors Bureau.

A wide cross section of Chester County farmers and agriculture service professionals were interviewed to determine the six focus areas: Agricultural Markets, Business & Financing, Education & Outreach, Labor & Workforce, Land Access, and Zoning & Land Use.

Although the plan's strategies are largely a road map for ag industry partners and farm businesses, Chester County residents will benefit from a stronger, more resilient agriculture industry in many ways. When farm businesses thrive, there is less competition for other kinds of more intensive land development. Successful farms also bring increased employment opportunities, a vibrant local food community, venues for family fun, environmental benefits—and the overall sense of place enjoyed by so many in the county.

Betsey MacCauley Wins Duncan Allison Distinguished Service to Agriculture Award

The Chester County Commissioners and Ag Council presented the Duncan Allison Award for Distinguished Service to Agriculture to Betsy MacCauley (Atglen, Pa.) for her over 30 years of service to the agriculture industry through her work as a 4-H Club livestock leader.

4-H is an informal education program for youth ages 8–18, designed to teach youth life skills, built on subject matter projects developed by Penn State Extension and National 4-H Council.

An accomplished farmer in her own right, MacCauley has touched the lives of hundreds if not thousands of aspiring young farmers through her ongoing volunteerism leading Chester County's Golden Fleece Sheep Club, judging competitions, mentoring youth, and welcoming visitors from all over the country to her family's award-winning sheep farm.

"Betsy is a fabulous volunteer and worthy of recognition," says Toni Stuetz, Penn State Extension Educator. "She is an asset to our 4-H program and the Chester County ag community."
